HOW TO FILL IN THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT FORM

One should pay special attention to the following when filling in the employment contract form:

1. Employment relationship

The section for “The start date of the employment” should indicate the date on which the parties have agreed the work performance to begin. When the terms of the employment are amended, or in situations that involve a transfer of business, for example, the start date of the employment relationship should indicate the original start date of the employment.

An employment contract can always be agreed to be valid indefinitely. A fixed-term employment contract requires a justified reason for the contract’s fixed-term nature. The basis for the fixed-term nature of the contract should be mentioned in the employment contract. The duration of a fixed-term employment contract can be tied to calendar time or the completion of a particular task, for example.

Agreeing on trial period is voluntary. The application of a trial period requires an agreement on the terms of the trial period in the employment contract. A trial period can last for a maximum of four (4) months. If the beginning of the employment relationship includes a consecutive period of training that is more than four (4) months long, the trial period may last for a maximum of six (6) months. The trial period occurs at the beginning of the employment relationship and the employment relationship may be terminated without a period of notice while during the trial period.

In a fixed-term employment relationship less than eight (8) months long, the trial period may not last for more than half of the employment relationship’s length.

2. Workplace and job title

The workplace agreed on typically specifies a city/town or a particular office.

The employment contract indicates the employee’s job title and the tasks the employee performs in his/her work. The broader the agreement concerning the tasks in the employment contract is, the greater the employer’s right to indicate other tasks for the employee based on its right to supervise work.

3. Period of notice

According to the Employment Contracts Act, the parties are free to agree on the length of a period of notice, but its length may nevertheless not exceed six (6) months. The parties may agree on the employee’s period of notice being shorter than that of the employer. The employer’s period of notice, however, cannot be agreed to be shorter than the employee’s period of notice.

Unless otherwise agreed with regard to the period of notice, the period of notice to be followed by the employer is determined according to the Employment Contracts Act as follows:

Duration of employment	Period of notice
no more than 1 year	14 days
more than 1, but no more than 4 years	1 month
more than 4, but no more than 8 years	2 months
more than 8, but no more than 12 years	4 months
more than 12 years	6 months

Unless otherwise agreed, the employee must, pursuant to the Employment Contracts Act, comply with a 14-day period of notice if the employment relationship has lasted for a maximum of five (5) years, and a month’s period of notice if the employment relationship has lasted for more than five (5) years.

4. Wages

It is advisable to agree on fringe benefits in addition to salary in money. At this time, the parties should also agree on whether the fringe benefits are paid in addition to the salary in money or whether their taxable value is deducted from the salary in money.

It is worthwhile agreeing on a payment by results in as much detail as possible and to agree on grounds for the determination of the payment by results that the employee is able to influence through his/her activities and that are clearly measurable.

It is furthermore advisable to agree on the period for which the payment by results is paid, should the employment relationship end in the middle of such a period.

5. Working hours

The employee’s regular working hours per day and week are agreed on when making the employment contract.

When agreeing on flexible hours, one must take into account the limitations provided in section 13 of the Working Hours Act.

Overtime is remunerated in accordance with the remuneration for overtime specified in the Working Hours Act. When so agreed, overtime may also be compensated for correspondingly as “raised” free time. Unless otherwise agreed, overtime will be remunerated in cash. The performance of overtime requires a request by the employer and the employee’s consent.

According to the Working Hours Act, the employment contract of an employee in a managerial position may include an agreement that the raised salary paid for overtime and Sunday work is paid as a separate monthly remuneration denominated in euros. An upper white-collar employee whose position is purely that of a specialist cannot agree on a monthly remuneration unless the collective agreement allows for it, as is the case in the technology industry, for example.

6. Annual holiday

Employees accrue annual holidays in accordance with the Annual Holidays Act. If the employment relationship has, by the end of the holiday credit year, i.e. 31 March, lasted for less than one (1) year, the employee has accrued two (2) days of annual holiday per each month at work. If the employment relationship has, by 31 March, lasted more than one (1) year, the employee has accrued two and a half (2.5) days of annual holiday per each month at work.

Given that the employee has not had the chance to accrue a full 30-day holiday right at the beginning of an employment relationship, it is advisable to agree on extra paid holidays in the employment contract.

The holiday bonus is not a term of the employment relationship based on the Annual Holidays Act, but collective agreements contain fairly extensive agreements on holiday bonuses. A holiday bonus to be paid in connection with the holiday pay can also be agreed on in the employment contract.

7. Sick pay

According to the Employment Contracts Act, an employee has the right, for an inability to work caused by an illness or an accident, to receive sick pay at most until the end of the 9th working day following the day on which the inability to work began. In employment relationships that have lasted less than one (1) month, the employee is entitled to receive 50 per cent of his/her wages.

Collective agreements typically agree on a longer period of sick pay than what is mentioned above.

8. Training

The employer is obligated to arrange and pay for all orientation and supplementary training the employee needs for his/her work. The parties may exceptionally agree on a division of training expenses if the training in question is not necessary in terms of the work or not based on the employer’s needs.

9. Travel expenses and travel time

The maximum amounts of compensation and the attendant requirements for them are confirmed by a decision of the Tax Administration. The decision does not obligate an employer to compensate the expenses arising to an employee from work-related travel. Collective agreements contain fairly extensive agreements on the compensation of an employee’s travel expenses. If there is no applicable collective agreement, the compensation for travel expenses must be agreed on in the employment contract.

According to the Working Hours Act, travel does not constitute working hours if it is not a work performance at the same time. The law does not obligate the employer to pay compensation for the time spent travelling. This is why one must agree on compensation for travel time in one’s employment contract.

10. Intellectual property rights

Copyright

Copyright is determined in accordance with the Copyright Act.

Employee inventions

The employer’s right to the employee’s inventions is determined according to what legislation provides in terms of inventions made by an employee. It is not advisable to make agreements that depart from the law with regard to inventions.

11. Collective agreement

The collective agreement applicable to the employment relationship must always be mentioned in the employment contract.

The application of a collective agreement may be based on the employer’s membership in an employer’s federation (normal applicability) or on the employer operating in an industry complying with a generally applicable employment contract. The applicability of a collective agreement can also be agreed on in the employment contract.

12. Other employment terms

By virtue of the Employment Contracts Act, the employee is entitled to have free time for the family leave periods provided in the Health Insurance Act, but there are no legal obligations for the payment of wages during family leave. Collective agreements typically agree on an employee's right to receive wages for periods of maternity and paternity leave and for a temporary child-care leave meant for organising care for a child under 10 years of age. If there is no applicable collective agreement, it is advisable to agree on the paid nature of various family leave periods in the employment contract.

The terms of any supplementary pension should be agreed on with the employer and the pension insurance company. It is also important to agree on the right to what is referred to as a paid-up free policy and to make an agreement on irrevocability, to prevent the employer from discontinuing the policy and withdrawing the accrued funds.
